

3-1-2016

Bell in the Rain

Annabel Banks
falmouth university

Follow this and additional works at: <http://scholars.wlu.ca/thegoose>

 Part of the Literature in English, British Isles Commons, Literature in English, North America Commons, Nature and Society Relations Commons, Place and Environment Commons, and the Poetry Commons

Recommended Citation

Banks, Annabel (2016) "Bell in the Rain," The Goose: Vol. 14: Iss. 2, Article 34.
Available at: <http://scholars.wlu.ca/thegoose/vol14/iss2/34>

This Poetry is brought to you for free and open access by Scholars Commons @ Laurier. It has been accepted for inclusion in The Goose by an authorized administrator of Scholars Commons @ Laurier. For more information, please contact scholarscommons@wlu.ca.

Bell in the Rain*

*So much depends upon the heavy falling. Wet legged, stick-footed, we work upon the methods of small-island living: cup hand, bowl lip still in surrender of no gravel potholed without water: earth's mix, mud, blood and red-space veins half-a-mile, flashlight-lit paths that widened with each thumping burst. a red wheel won't escape the weir's cascade. Despite tire's trapped breath a barrow hulks Isabel down the trail: rivers are umbilical, she yells. Water can't just be grown son grumbling, heaving, through the ruts and stones: water as we'll be there soon Mom. Promise of arrival. Chemical marriage and children of breaths who Isabel recites from her school days: breath, ink and the copper pipe of natural she still remembers, breath, ink and copper, yes, but failure to notice the rise. she used to stand so proud: she used to believe in shelter, not glazed with rain like everything since the engines took the copper away, took water from the guiding channels and liquid-formed agreements. Here cupped beside the white, emptied veins, the barren-drown deep that still remembers chickens being fed from the hand, with bowl lips gleaming like their contained necessary stem pull it together, Mom. Draw the trained element of husbandry trod sodden for there are no chickens, and it's not raining on our Bell anymore though (there is, however, a red wheelbarrow). and this pours out without end*

*Words in italics are taken from William Carlos William's poem: "The Red Wheelbarrow" (1923).

*Words underlined are taken from Bronwyn Preece's poem "Isabel's Wheelbarrow" (Issue 11, 2012).

ANNABEL BANKS has an MA in prose and is currently writing up her practice-based PhD, “Poetry and the Archive.” Her poems and stories have won, or been nominated for, a number of awards and can be found in journals, magazines and anthologies. Full details can be found at www.annabelbanks.com.