Xʷáɣxʷay¹

Back to the bush molding me back to human I follow a path up a hill, the windy reach of trees loosening, combing out knots of urban stress roots, stones, pinecones, nuts massaging the soles of my feet I stop at my destination, Beaver Lake, the acclaimed jewel, and part heavy curtains of cattails I see no turtles, geese, herons or song birds only a few ducks standing on a log on the crusty beach The lake is drowning in water lilies placed there years ago, a sign says, to beautify it for the Queen's Jubilee I imagine a parting of the White Princesses and Snow Whites, the lake revived teeming with wildlife—back to the treasure of the Coast Salish my white skin like birch skin for writing on, painting on ANDREA NICKI is the author of two books of poetry, Welcoming (Inanna Press, 2009) and Noble Orphan (Demeter Press, 2014). A new collection is forthcoming with Mago Books.

¹ Xʷáɣxʷay is a Sḵwɣwú7mesh (Squamish) village site located in what is now known as Stanley Park in Vancouver, a city on unceded Coast Salish Territory. The area was known as Xʷáɣxʷay for thousands of years.
