

WLU closing in forthcoming year

by Herman P. Slopthrower

It was revealed today in a press conference that Wilfrid Laurier University will be closing next year because of low profits. Sources close to the head of the school informed the Cored that the Board of Directors are dissatisfied with their low return on investment. "Hell, we can take our money and go elsewhere and earn at least a guaranteed 8 1/4 per cent, with about half of the problems," stated Crank P. Feters. "I don't know of one investor who would take only 6 per cent as we are," he further commented.

Claude Bull-yea, Business Manager at WLU commented that alternate uses for the campus are being considered, "we could open the largest day care centre in Canada, or a health spa, or a garage, convention centre, brother, you name it, we could probably start it up," he stated.

Rumours immediately began to circulate amongst the faculty and staff as to their future. The closure outraged the faculty. Professor Gary Humburer of the Psychology Department stated "what in heaven's name are we profs going to do now; we're all over-educated for every job imaginable except Prime Minister and some over-educated bum has already got that!" Dean Val Ali (no relation to Muhammed Ali) of the Arts and Science faculty commented, "we had it made, two lectures a week, $20,000 plus a year, and when it came to articles we had to publish all we did was recopy a Penthouse story; I knew it all had to end."

The Board is currently considering a proposal forwarded by Dean Glenn Char-hole. Char-hole's plan is designed to keep the facilities open by forming the world's largest 'Small Business Consulting' firm. "Gee, we can really build this into something; teams of 600 students handling each case, we can cover everybody in Canada, and hell, it'll keep them delinquents off the streets next year." Sources close to the Board revealed that Char-hole's proposal has an inside track.

The Board is also considering what they will invest in with their recently released funds. One of the possibilities being considered is the purchase of UniWat, closing it down also, and opening a nudist colony for people under 4'6".

What remains to be seen is where the 2600 students at WLU will go. Conestoga has flatly turned down because most of them don't meet the entrance requirements. Prime Minister Trudeau has effectively cut off all Unemployment Benefits and Welfare for the students, except for the support received at the toe of a boot.

WLUSU to open massage parlour

The WLUSU Board of Directors announced today that they plan to open a massage parlour in the premises formerly occupied by Uncle Wilf's. Treasurer Steve "Ricky" Richards formally revealed the plans at a conference on "Morality on Laurier's Campus" sponsored by the Christian Fellowship. The parlour, to be called "Auntie Wilf's", will use student labour. In order to avoid the problems caused by Uncle Wilf's last year, the girls will be signed to contracts immediately which will specify job requirements (blond, blue-eyed and stacked) and rate of pay which will of course, be dependent upon the service performed.

The opening of the parlour is seen as a move to compete with the university's opening of a stripper palace in the Dining Hall.

Richards was quick to point out that the opening of this business will effectively scrap plans for a student Computer Dating service.

Applications for the positions are available from the WLUSU office and interviews will be conducted on Thursday and Friday night over dinner and dancing.

The WLUSU Board of Directors has decided to turn the vacant Uncle Wilf's shop into a massage parlour. The decision was made at last night's meeting. Of course, true to form, WLUSU held the meeting in camera, kicking out the Cord and all other concerned students. But Keen Cordee S. MacDonald managed to sneak around outside to the boardroom window and sketch this real-life representation of the proceedings.

New tennis courts under way

Flora MacDonald

Construction is under way for the new tennis courts on the east end of the football field, but the plans have been changed again. WLU has now opted for a construction plan that will save the university tens of thousands of dollars in labour and construction costs. At the same time Laurier students will receive an outdoor swimming pool out of the new deal at no additional cost.

Rather than have the original contractor build the courts, the students of Archaeology 100 will dig the site out, free of charge, thus saving the school the cost of labour.

The decision to go ahead with the Archaeology 100 excursion was made by the planning committee after a number of human bones had been found in various places around the east end of the football field. The finding occurred last week when a Waterloo resident was walking her dog across the field, and the pet became interested in a lump on the ground. Upon discovery of a human skull the woman, who has asked not to be identified, informed the Waterloo Regional Police.

Police, however, were unable to do anything for the skeleton after it had been retrieved from the ground. After applying mouth to mouth resuscitation for twenty minutes, the skeleton was pronounced dead.

This, along with other finds, is expected to be the remains of two intramural ice hockey teams that vanished in the winter of 1969 while playing on a rink on the same location as the areas proposed for the tennis courts. Near the end of the first period, the game was blanked out by a freak snowstorm which swept over the city. Rather than end the game, the two teams played on. No one was ever seen again. The outcome of the game is unknown.

At the time, the event was the cause of much concern, "Without the results of the game, we don't know how to pair off teams for the championships," was how intramural director Barry J. Mockum summed up the situation.

When examination of the field showed evidence of more bodies, the university administration finally approached the Archaeology department about the possibility of excavating the site.

Professor Doug Lotz, Chairman of the department, immediately grasped the opportunity. "What better way to have some fun, do a service for you school, and get a credit on the side," according to Professor Lotz.

Archaeology 100 students are enthusiastic about their excursion. As one student exclaimed, "I think I can really dig it!"

All material excavated will go on display in the concourse during the month of May.

The excursion/construction gets under way tomorrow.

Plans for new Business building

The School of Business and Economics today changed plans concerning the new Business Building promised earlier this year. Claude Bull-yea stated that alternate facilities have been found, namely the Waterloo Regional Stockyards. The owners of the Stockyards have offered to rent the facilities to WLU for five years at cost. The manager pointed out that some students will surely be lost in the shuffle at the stockyards, but that "they'll turn up sooner or later, maybe in a can of dog food, but they'll turn up."

Student President, Marg Royal, repeatedly pointed out at a news conference that you just can't treat students like cattle, but retracted her statement when it was revealed that the students are treated like cattle already. Dr. Peters refused to comment on the subject but uttered a lowly "moo" when walking away from this reporter.

Wilfrid Laurier University Security is investigating a report of a missing person on campus. Some time ago Security was notified of the disappearance of a small individual known only as Rufus.

This individual is last reported to be wearing a poorly kept orange winter coat, and was last seen in the WLU dining hall before reading week.

Rufus was known to frequent to dining hall, often spending most of his day there. He wandered from table to table, not known to hang around with any one crowd.

Some people he associated with noticed his absence after returning from reading week. Also his professors have notified the Registrar's office of his absence from lectures over the last half of the term.

Security are investigating one lead at the present time. An unidentified source reported that they last saw Rufus in a scuffle with a member of the dining hall staff the day before reading week. Apparently the cook grabbed Rufus by the scruff of the neck, kicking and screaming, and carried him into the kitchen area. The source says he heard a scream from the kitchen, and never saw Rufus again.

Johnny Walker, head of Security at WLU, says it is extremely hard to follow such leads. Security has investigated the kitchen area, but, as Walker says, "by now he could have been digested through the system, so to speak."

If this lead turns up no clues, Security will search all fish markets in the K-W area.

While some people are alarmed at the disappearance, others expressed different sentiments.

"I'm glad to see him go," said one student, "God, the guy had to be the biggest mooch on the campus."

Practical Joke

The habitual postal strike hound

by Darn Smutt

There has been advice from all sectors of society about the many different ways to end the customary postal strikes. One method to solve the problem, which has not been suggested, and I don't know why, is to use out favourite pet, the dog. You see, there are many dogs who don't have a home. They end up in the Humane Societies, where they are housed and fed. However, at these institutions, life for the average dog is a real bore.

Instead of keeping these dogs locked up in a cage all the time, we should all go out and buy one. Once everyone has a dog, the friendly little creatures should be sent to dog school, where obedience, and the art of biting a human leg on command from its master are learned. Then, after completing the course with a grade point average of 9 (B+), the dogs will return to their masters all across the country.

Now, when there is a rumour in the air about a possible postal strike, the dogs use their textbook theory that they acquired in dog school, and for the first time, turn it into practical application. In other words, when the postman comes around to deliver the mail, the dog residing at that residence, growls, grunts, and barks at the postman, in a threatening manner.

However, if the strike rumour turns into reality, by the calling of a strike deadline date, the dogs will meet their mailmen, by sinking their long sharp teeth into the leg of the mail carrier. The threat posed by the dogs, may be enough of a deterrent to keep the Postal Union from ever going out on strike again.

The advantages to this alternative solution, are numerous. Firstly, and most important, there won't be any more disruptions in the Canadian mail service. Secondly, the money used for the dogs in the first place, will help the financial situation of all Humane Societies, so that other kinds of animals will be treated better. Thirdly, those companies which manufacture dog food and dog products, will need to produce more, because of the increased demand. Increased production requires more jobs, which therefore reduces the unemployment rate. Forthly the lawns and gardens will be much improved because of the increased supply of fertilizer. Finally, each dog will have its own home.

With all of these benefits, it's no wonder they say that the dog is man's best friend.

Fly Poop

I'm writing to complain about some of the services offered on campus. In specific, I want to point out some problems I have encountered in the dining hall.

Not to bitch, mind you! But I'm getting perturbed at the amount of fly-poop in the pepper. Really, it bothers me.

Not that it tastes bad, but it's as hard as hell to pick the little balls of fly-poop out from between you teeth after a meal. Sure, you can brush your teeth, but that means you have to pick the crap off the bristles when you are done.

We need action. No more fly poop in the pepper.

Academies

Dear Editor,
I have met several people in my life and I have found, after careful study, that most wrong-thinking people are actually right. And I, for one, am sick and tired of being told that these people are not only right, but also sick and tired.

I feel that one of these wrong thinking sick and tired persons is your entertainment editor Mr. R. Hothouse MacDonald.

I perused his recent article on the Academy Awards and I disagree with his selection of Robert De Negro as "best actor".

Most wrong-thinking people agree that the best actor of all-time is Clint Walker. He was excellent a few years back in his portrayal of a bear in "The Night of the Grizzly".

Clint was excellent in the scene where he had his head nailed to a pomegranate.

The best supporting actor should have gone to Joe Flynn for his three wonderful posthumous appearances on the Merv Griffin Show.

Flynn, like Griffin, is a very talented and funny, funny man.

I also resent Mr. MacDonald's comment that Joe Flynn is balding. He certainly is not. He's just got some extra face.

I agree with Mr. MacDonald that the academy was completely incorrect in selecting "Rocky" as the best feature film of the year. I disagree with his alternate selection "All the President's Men", however. The obvious selection as best movie was the "Chainsaw Mas-sacres" starring Richard Speck and his good pal Juan Coron.

And in closing, I would like to recommend that Mr. MacDonald be chained to the back of a Toyota Corolla and taken for a scrape around the block.

Yours sincerely,
Elrod Chapinsky

Well, the revolving door is on the move at Cher-Bono-Allman's again. Greg the Rat is out and according to a reliable source, Cher's new beau is London, former star of the "Littlest Hobo" series. Says Cher, "I'm sick and tired of being married to guys that aren't talented. London is a better singer, he's much easier to cook for, and most of all, he's housebroken. And besides, he will be a great companion for Chastity."

Tatum O'Neal will star in an upcoming series called "The Bionic Brat". In the show, she will possess a bionic yap which will be used to snub the evil people around her. Staying with the world of bionics, Lee Majors-Fawcett, husband of Farrah-to-mediocre Fawcett, came home one night and found his wife in the arms of the Sasquatch. In the ensuing fracas, the Sasquatch crushed both of them. Three cheers for Big Foot!

Sharpshooter Claudine Longet was recently seen following cross-country skiers on a trail in Boulder, Colorado. She was wearing a Spider Sabich T-shirt and toting a .303 with a scope. Sixshots were heard but three skiers were reported missing. Rumours have it that the rifle was also equipped with a silencer.

Mary Tyler Moore found herself in an embarrassing situation during a recent taping of a T.V. special. The hot studio lights melted her makeup and her face collapsed. Either he was whispering the gospel in her ear or things were getting hot and heavy. Sorry, Marie.

Because tennis players are often hard to swallow, the good people at Roloids have also offered to lend their services in case of an emergency.

Act of Violence

Ross MacDonald, former entertainment editor of the Cord Weekly, suffered an unfortunate accident the other day. While driving to school, MacDonald became so infuriated with the AM radio in his car that he ripped his head off.

This is the second time MacDonald has lost his cool over Disco music. Last year, he threatened to pull his ears off if the juke box in the Turret wasn't disconnected.

Doctors say the head can be stitched back on but that MacDonald must refrain from listening to the radio. As a result of this prescription, solitary confinement will probably be the only cure.

BOOKS: All the Business Manager's Men

All the Business Manager's Men by James Fischer
Illustrated. 349 pp.
New York: Simon & Schuster
$8.95

All the Business Manager's Men

is the Pulitzer Prize winning story of the year. It recreates the six year cover-up of cash leakage from the former WLU Business Manager's safe. The book takes one from the safe break-in to the Waterloo County hearings.

Fischer, the author and the detective, relates how an assignment at The Cord Weekly led him from the discovery of a petty criminal to All of the Business Manager's Men.

The arrest of Carl Arnold, former Business Manager at WLU took place on Monday, December 6, 1976 at the Laurier Student Union's National headquarters. Fischer, assigned to the story by Cord editor, Murray Souter, uncovered the facts of the arrest. This led him on.

At every turn of events, Souter stood over his reporter, making sure that at least two reliable sources were used to substantiate each new piece of evidence. Souter served not only as editor, but as prosecutor and judge, demanding accuracy at all times. The reputation and careers of formidable men at WLU were on the line. These high standards held everyone at the Cord responsible for the stories. It was with incredible faith in his reporter that Souter could say, again and again, "We stand by our story."

In his book, however, Fischer does lead us to some facts which make his reporting more than unconventional. It is at times, dishonest. Once he used as a source, a man who said nothing, a man who merely waited until the count of ten before he hung up the phone. This perhaps was not dishonest, but by using his connections with the phone and credit companies, Fischer obtained the travel expense and phone records of two high-ranking WLU officials.

Another source, Deep Throat, is still unknown and probably roams the corridors of WLU, even now. Deep Throat had access to WLUSU, the Dean's office, the security department, and the CRP (Certified Returns on Pinball).

Turret Manager, George Fraser, is reported to have said of the affair, "One breathed a rarefied air when one was in the Business Manager's service. The people in the SUB believed they were entitled to do things differently, to suspend the rules, because they were fulfilling a mission. That was the important thing—the mission. It was easy to lose perspective."

Fischer rarely lost perspective in his reporting. The highly professional inner workings of The Cord

Weekly are the most interesting parts of the book. One of the most humorous aspects is the 3 am tale of Souter and Fischer. Afraid of being bugged, they met on Souter's front lawn to discuss the Cord policy on the cover-up. Perhaps this is a little melodramatic, but it does show the incredible pressure put on the reporter and the newspaper.

The climax of the book comes when the reader learns that Arnold, feeling secure in his position, has bugged himself. His own reports of where the money actually went seem to be his final nemesis.

The book is excellent and informative reading, but as yet is unresolved. Perhaps, Fischer will write a sequel about the final days of Arnold's job.

It is rumoured that a feature film will be made of this book. All actors have not been secured, but it is hoped that Dean Fred Nichols will take the role of Murray Souter, and an unknown actor, Dustin Hoffman, will star as reporter-sleuth, Jim Fischer.

B.T.O. adds new member

Randy Bachman, lead guitarist for Bachman-Turner Overdrive, announced at a press conference yesterday that the band has added a new member.

This recent addition is 10 month old Elmer Williams, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Harold Williams of Trail, B.C. Elmer is an avid B.T.O. fan and at the age of 3 months he was able to keep beat to most of the band's hits. By the time he reached 5 months, he could utter the lyrics.

Realizing her son's talents, Mrs. Williams immediately contacted Bachman who in turn contacted his manager. Elmer's talents were then recorded on tape. Bachman was so excited with what he heard that he hired him immediately!

Bachman stated that Elmer would handle most of the vocals in upcoming projects. Williams will also play his rattle and "just make noise in general".

The proud parents have made sure that Elmer receives a solid contract. They have demanded that their son be supplied with a healthy amount of Gerber's baby food before each concert and also that a supply of Pampers be made readily available.

When reached for a comment, Elmer could only say "goo goo, ga ga, you ain't seen nothin' yet."

Loss to entertainment world one of its finest performers, Frank Hogel. The medical examiner said that Hogel apparently died from high blood pressure but witnesses in the WLU games room gave rather conflicting reports. Said one player, who only went by the name of George,

"I think Hogel died from excessive embarrassment. He was playing the Captain Fantastic machine in front of a large crowd and of the four guys playing the machine, he was the only one who wasn't winning games. People just started to harass him and Hogel went into convulsions. It was horrible!"

And another customer, Mike, gave this report.

"Well it was simply the worst thing I've seen since that guy went berserk after he was ripped off by the cashew machine. I think Hogel was a walking time-bomb. He was fine until we started to hassle him about his mediocre play. It's sure a good thing he didn't have a gun."

No one will ever really know the mental anguish that this man suffered. He finally reached a point where he could no longer accept the idea of not winning free games.

Any donations should be forwarded to the Pinball Machines of America fund. Frank would have wanted it that way.

Golden Hawks clinch 1997 College Bowl 5-1 after Bloody Two-day seige

(Special to the Cord) "It's about time we won that damn thing."

These words were uttered by WLU assistant coach "Tuffy" Knight from his wheel chair in a post-game interview at Northern Secondary High School in Toronto where the annual depravity is staged.

Coach Knight had nothing but compliments for the head coach, Tom Dewey, congratulating him on the fanatical motivation Dewey instilled in his players. "Yes sir, Tom really got those kids goin', after they saw him take a bite out of that referee, they knew he was serious about winning this thing."

Everyone else witnessing the two-day battle had to be impressed with the way the Hawks hung tough despite receiving such crippling injuries as ruptured spleens, punctured lungs and inflamed testicles. Not even the twelve fatalities incurred throughout the match deterred the WLU machine from accomplishing their ultimate goal...complete annihilation of the opposing team, their friends, relatives, passing acquaintances, etc.

The turning point in the match came when Laurier monster Red Ruffansore penetrated a wall of opposing blockers and made contact with the ball carrier. With the dexterity of a dying koala bear, Ruffansore kicked the running back squarely in the groin and with one swing of his mailed fist, he shattered the unfortunate man's helmet and splintered every single bone in the poor idiot's facial configuration.

Before his opponent had time to recover, Ruffansore wrapped his massive paw around the decapitated ball player's scrawny neck in a vice-like grip and proceeded to shake him violently from side to side, snapping his spinal column in the process.

Scooping the blood soaked ball from the inert body's feeble grasp, Ruffansore, calmly sauntered toward the opposing team's goal line on all fours, stopping briefly to pick his teeth with a sliver of bone sticking to his uniform from a previous encounter.

The touchdown that followed culminated one of the most action-packed sporting events since Attila the Hun swept across Asia, raping and pillaging en route.

The statistics were impressive, at last count fifteen were dead, forty-three injured, and three players were listed as missing in action.

Coach Dewey attributed the aggressive play of his star player, Ruffansore, to the fact that he hadn't been near a woman in 36 years.

"Ol Red, bein' the true jock that he is, don't need no woman, he's doin' well enough on his own", defiantly declared Dewey.

Whatever the reason, Ruffansore was certainly at his blood thirsty best throughout the course of the match.

If Laurier can find more players of similar dispositions, their future as perennial college football champions is secure.
