Kootenay River & the Brilliant Dam

This body instrumentalized turbulent through turbines howls electric under clear skies in early spring

As the flood uneartths bones that swirl in eddies dislodged from the riverbanks

As sorrowful songs rise from its body its currents and gather in the pools where the water slows

And this body sings electric reluctant aqueous and acquiescing

As it runs through systems designed to store-manage-display-analyze all types of geographic and spatial data that render this place these bones pliable a matériel for extraction

Still, as it ever was this body moves south its voice raw with the flood its flow velocity pounding against barrages that will one day fail or be dismantled

And I am small by the side of the highway drowned by the steady roar of water through turbines.

Note on the Text *matériel: “To make things into tools in the first place, we remove them from autonomous existence and conscript them as servants, determining their immediate futures” (McKay n.p.).

Works Cited

RENÉE JACKSON-HARPER, BA (University of Toronto), MA (York University), is a PhD candidate in Canadian literature at York University and a faculty member in the departments of English and Creative Writing at Selkirk College in Nelson, BC. She is a faculty adviser on the Black Bear Review, Selkirk College’s literary and arts magazine, and serves on the board of the Kootenay...
Literary Society. Her creative work has been published in numerous journals and was the recent recipient of Contemporary Verse 2’s Lina Chartrand Poetry Prize for emerging poets.